EC Puts 10-Day Freeze On Some Farm Subsidies

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches day a 10-day freeze on some agrifrom running out of money.

The European Commission is scheduled to discuss the financial crisis when it meets Friday, and it ----may extend the freeze, according to a spokesman who declined to be identified.

> Officials from several delegations said that if the freeze is extended through year's end, the EC. will save $255 million to $297 milan meg EC officials said payments would be withheld on a broad range of items, including dairy products, wine, cereals, beef, olive oil and sugar. They said the subsi-dies involved are those paid to private export companies that buy produce and ship it abroad. The only farmers likely to be directly involved are those who belong to Italian olive-oil cooperatives that do their own exporting, the officials said.

-- The freeze underscored the financial crisis facing the European Community and its $13.6-billion farm program. With a strict limit ntes to the budget, the trading group has run out of cash because the agriculture program requires antomatic outlays regardless of how much is produced.

The commission has been warning member governments and the European Parliament for months that funding would run out before the end of the year.

News of a subsidy freeze came first from Athens on Monday, but the decision was overruled Tue by Gaston Thorn, president of the ommission. However, the pressure of events compelled the commission to decide on the emergency action Tuesday night.

Christopher Tugendhat, the budget commissioner, said that the commission was forced to act quickly and under difficult circumstances Tuesday night to avoid what he called pre-emptive mea-sures by third parties. Political sources said this was a reference to the commission's alarm that pro-ducers and traders would anticipate any freeze and rush in with applications for advances.

The European Commission's decision to suspend payments of farm export subsidies met with an angry esponse from members of the Enropean Parliament, meeting in Strasbourg, France, to debate a supplementary budget.

TOKYO - Former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka was found Wednesday of accepting a bribe from the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. and was sentenced to four vears in prison.

Judge Mitsunori Okada also fined Mr. Tanaka 500 million yen (about $2.2 million at the current exchange rate), the equivalent of what he said Mr. Tanaka received in 1973 and 1974 while serving as prime minister for persuading All Nippon Airways to buy 21 Lockheed airliners.

Lebanon Sets Political Talks For Next Week

By Thomas L. Friedman

New York Times Service BEIRUT - The government of President Amin Gemayel formally invited the leaders of Lebanon's warring factions Wednesday to a national reconciliation conference

However, heavy fighting between the Lebanese Army and Druze militiamen outside Beirut, as well as reservations put forward by some of the parties invited to the talks, raised questions on whether the meeting could be held on time.

In one of the worst violations of the cease-fire that went into effect Sept. 26, the Lebanese Army and anti-government Druze militia traded fire with heavy artillery and rocket-propelled grenades around the town of Souk al-Gharb, seven miles southeast of Beirut, a Lebanese Army spokesman reported. Army sources said six soldiers were wounded, two of them seriously, in the artillery duel, which began to taper off after sunset. In the northern Lebanese port Tripoli, at least eight people were killed and 15 wounded in 24 hours of fighting between commu-nists and Sunni Moslem fundamentalists. Reuters reported.)

Despite the cease-fire violations, however, the government pressed ahead with efforts to convene the national reconciliation dialogue. The state-run National News Agency said that Mr. Gemayel had instructed the governors of Lebanon's different provinces to extend invitations to Lebanese factional eaders in their areas.

The government announced that the venue of the meeting would not be announced until 24 hours before it takes place for security reasons. Besides the security concerns, however, there was still no agreement on where it should be held.

The Druze leader, Walid Jumblat, refuses to attend the meeting if it is held, as the government wants, in the presidential palace in Baabda because he feels his life might be endangered by travel to and from the Beirut area.

Omissions Alleged in Aquino Inquiry

General's Report Said to Ignore Possible Army Role der burns had proved positive on from three years of self-imposed

By Bob Secter Los Angeles Times Service

MANILA - The disbanding Monday of a panel looking into the nurder of Benigno S. Aquino Jr. leaves the investigation to govern-ment detectives whose findings to date have been riddled with omissions and inconsistencies, a source involved in the inquity says.

The man said that some of the conclusions reached by the chief government investigator, Major General Prospero Olivas, "make me sick to my stomach." For instance, he said, the latest confidential report on the case prepared by General Olivas flatly states that Mr. Aquino was shot Aug. 21 by a professional killer, Rolando Galman, although evidence indicates that it could not be ruled out that a soldier was the

The source agreed to discuss problems with the investigation as long as his name was not disclosed. The new allegation followed a disclosure Monday by the deputy counsel of the investigating panel. The lawyer, Amadeo Seno, said that a test that could show gunpow-

the hands of two soldiers. Military authorities had said that both soldiers were marmed when they escorted Mr. Aquino off an airplane moments before he was shot.

That information was omitted from the Olivas report that was delivered last month to the special investigating commission appoint-ed by President Ferdinand E. Marcos to supervise the Aquino investigation. The report was leaked to the press Monday.

Mr. Marcos had appointed the commission to allay suspicions that the government might try to cover up something in the investigation. But the political opposition said that most panchists were closely tied to the president, and predicted that the panel would produce a whitewash.

When they resigned Monday, the commission members urged Mr. Marcos to revamp it in such a way as to satisfy skeptics. He has promised to consider the suggestions.

Mr. Aquino, Mr. Marcos's chief rival for power, was killed as he was being led by soldiers from an airplane that had brought him back exile in the United States.

The Olivas report on the killing shows that the military investigation has been less than thorough, said the source, who has closely studied both the report and evidence in the case.

For example, the source noted, the report concludes that Mr. Galman rushed Mr. Aquino from behind on the sirport tarmac and shot him once in the head with a .357 Magnum revolver. The bullet moved in a downward angle.

"In order to produce that trajectory, Galman would have to be eight feet tall," the source said. He said the trajectory might be consis-tent with another theory, not mentioned in the Olivas report, that the shot was fired from an emergency stairway that Mr. Aquino and his escorts had been descending.

The source said that other questions included the following: • A suggestion in the Olivas report that Mr. Galman, after firing at Mr. Aquino, was quickly knocked off balance by one of the guards and then hit within seconds (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

Agency have again challenged Israel's membership in the 111-nation body because of its June 1981 bombing raid on an Iraqi nuclear reactor. In a draft resolution Wednesday at the agency's annual conference, the Arab states said the raid amounted to an attack against the agency itself. A separate Iraqi draft called on the agency to suspend research contracts with Israel and to halt the purchase of Israeli equipment and the holding of meetings in Israel. It demanded compensation from Israel for damage to the Osirak reactor.

The U.S. delegation, which stormed out of last year's meeting when Arab states tried to expel Israel, has said it will not stand for any infringement of Israeli membership rights. After the 1982 meeting the United States boycotted agency activities for six months and held back its financial contributions.

Politicians Debate Problems of Hunger and Security, but Fail to Stem Rising Sense of Panic By Jackson Dichl

Washington Post Service RIO DE JANEIRO — It began on a Tuesday night in September, the eve of a Brazilian work holiday. Nothing had happened in Vila Kennedy, a poor outlying suburb, until shortly after midnight. Then the word swept through the streets like a storm blowing in.

From the main square, people came run-ning under the rail tracks to the narrow crescent that holds the Leao and Cameiro supermarkets. The looting had started. Gray security shutters had been wrenched open and 10-pound (4.5-kilogram) sacks of rice and black beans were being cleaned out. Hundreds joined in The doors of a third

That was the fourth day of Rio's supermarket sackings, when the count was 17 break-ins in the city's poor northeastern sub--urbs. A month later the count had passed 85. and the looting had spread to towns all over this economically stricken nation.

Looting has become the most dramatic reflection of the tensions that Brazil's ecomomic crisis, and its $90-billion foreign debt, have created. Since the beginning of September, more than 225 supermarkets, food ware-houses and shops have been attacked and stripped in Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo and drought-stricken northeastern Brazil.

In Brazil's newly liberalized political atmosphere, the risks posed by unrest also extend to opposition governors elected last vear. Both Leonel Brizola in Rio de Janeiro and Franco Montoro in São Paulo have been accused by businessmen and conservatives of failing to take the police action necessary to halt the looting.

Some Brazilian politicians have begun to worry that the mix of political conflict and economic crisis could cause a reversal of the military's gradual move toward democracy. Even the Rio de Janeiro organization of the military-backed Social Democratic Party recently issued a statement saying that violence by "famished masses" could lead to "The people just don't have money," said Joaquin Carneiro, the owner of the Carneiro supermarket in Vila Kennedy. Mr. Carneiro said he had lost $20,500 worth of stock when looters took nearly 10 metric tons of rice and beaus from his market.

Government authorities have increased police guards and patrols in some areas and attempted to organize food distribution programs on a small scale. But authorities sometimes have appeared paralyzed by political quarrels over how to address the problem.

In São Paulo, Mr. Montoro and police officials have blamed the lootings on hunger and argued that exceptional security measures will do little good. But in Rio, Mr. Brizola charges that the sackings are the result of an "institutional system" of the

The governor's theory has led to bitter public exchanges. "There is a simple lack of authority," said Ruy Barreto, president of the Rio de Janeiro Commercial Association of Brazil. "Brizola doesn't want to crack down on the people who elected him. He is looking for a scapegoat."

The official confusion has contributed to a widespread public sense of impending chaos.

"There is a sense of desperation," said Celio Borja, a director of the Social Democratic Party and president of a Rio de Janeiro bank association. "People are beginning to expect that they will be assaulted on the street. They are accepting the idea that they are not going to get a job. They see no hope."

"There is a general crisis of government management." Mr. Borja said. "The state government has not prepared itself and cannot act effectively, and the federal government has no initiative, no creativity, because it is completely wrapped up in the problem of the foreign debt. There is no will to address the needs of the poor."

Too Many Debt Crises

How many more crises can the world's financial system survive? Political stability requires it to survive every challenge, but the odds decline with every new shock. Brazil, with the largest debt of any country, needs help for the second time this year. Argentina, the thirdlargest debtor, also needs another quick infusion. The Philippines appears to need another soon. That three major borrowers ran into trouble shortly after they were supposedly safely affoat should be warning enough that patchwork rescues are not enough.

The developing countries owe private foreign banks, governments and international agencies about $700 billion. Half that debt is Latin American; interest consumes about half Argentina's and Brazil's annual export earnings. The soundest remedy for all concerned is vigorous expansion of the debtors' exports, but that depends on strong economic recovery in the countries that buy their goods, the kind that is visible only in the United States. Other remedies are less certain to work, and all of them are painful. One would be to surrender to a wave of defaults, to stop throwing good money after bad. The bankrupts, of course, would get no more loans anywhere; the human toll would be ghastly and the political consequences could be revolutionary. Also, the banks that hold their debts would have to be bailed out, at considerable cost to the industrial economies. Huge defaults might not be the end of the world, but they would raise havoc.

A second option is to continue on the present path, addressing each crisis separately. That worked reasonably well when fewer countries were on the ropes and the world economy was robust, but more than 40 countries are now in trouble and the world economy is sluggish. Individual rescues involve new loans from the International Monetary Fund, which in return demands austerity measures to curb inflation - reduced government spending, restrictions on imports. But how can exports grow when so many countries are reducing imports simultaneously and dragging down growth in more prosperous nations?

A third possibility would be to create a new international mechanism to take over the private banks' loans at a discount, stretch out repayment schedules and reduce interest charges. But private bankers do not want to take losses on their shaky debts. Their governments fear the cost of buying up that debt and central bankers think it unhealthy to postpone the debtors' belt-tightening.

Nonetheless, some concerted action is likely to become necessary. The successive bail-outs of Mexico, Argentina and Brazil have been impressive. An increase in the U.S. contribution to the IMF, which Congress has been delaying, would relieve some nervousness. But each new crisis casts doubt on the adequacy of what has been done. It raises the costs of doing more and the risks that what can be done the next time will not be enough

A Propaganda War That Both Sides Lose

By William Pfaff

DARIS - Now it is conceded by American officials that the Russians did believe that the South Korean Bocing 747 shot down on the night of Aug. 31-Sept. 1 was an American spy plane. The New York Times reports that U.S. intelligence, having received all the evidence available, finds "no indication that the Soviet air defense personnel knew it was a commercial plane before the attack." U.S. intelligence is "confident that the Su-15 fighter involved was below and behind the airliner," where identification would have been difficult.

U.S. intelligence has reached "general agreement that the Soviet Air Defense force had displayed a poor capacity to intercept aircraft in Soviet airspace, to distinguish between commercial and military aircraft and to identify a plane before shooting it down." These conclusions, the report says, were delivered to the White House two weeks after the attack.

So the Soviet Union has been telling the truth about this: It did not know that the plane was a passenger aircraft. It believed the flight was a hostile intrusion by U.S. military intelligence. It dealt with the plane brutally — as has always been its declared policy. It shot it down.

The last five weeks of frenzied attack and counterattack, by Western

There probably are people in Washington and the other Western capitals who will say: So what? It all has produced a glorious victory for the West in the propaganda war.

So it has, so far. If in the future something should come out to substantiate the Soviet claim that this 747 was on an intelligence mission of some nature, the incident will become not a propaganda catastrophe for the United States, but a moral catastrophe. Moreover, if this 747 was on U.S. service, it will eventually come out. Washington cannot keep the South Korean airliner affair, says that the affair has provided "an unprecedented opportunity to show the truth, which is the greatest communication asset we have on behalf of the free world against the disinformation of the Soviets. And that's what this contest is all about."

But the truth about the episode, as apparently has been known in Washington since mid-September, is not what America has been telling.

A spokesman for the Department of State has said that whatever the truth of the matter, the position of the U.S. government would not change, since even if the Soviets were not able to tell a 747 from an RC-135 they should have been able to do so, and they thereby reveal themselves to be "negligent or incompetent or both." Yet the attack upon the Soviet

High Time To Turn Off The Noise

By George F. Keunan WASHINGTON — Moscow ini-tially expected that in some areas, at least, reasonable agreements and understandings could be reached with the Reagan administration. . . The Soviet leaders expected hard bargaining in arms talks, but they supposed that negotiations would be kept confidential until agreements had been achieved, and that U.S. positions would be carried forward in the "correct," dispassionate and busi-nesslike style used so effectively in earlier years by such fine negotiators as Averell Harriman, Ellsworth Bunker and Llewellyn Thompson.

But even before the South Korean plane incident they had begun to have doubts. Now they seem to have come to the conclusion, rightly or wrongly, that what they are up against in Washington is something much more serious than mere domestic political posturing — namely, a genuine and profoundly rooted ideological commitment against them, which no amount of normal dickering and compromise could change. And they see this commitment as binding upon an administration which is in the saddle not only for one more year but possibly for another four years after that. This has far-reaching implications. If Soviet leaders did not see America as a potential ally, they also did not view it as a wholly committed enemy.

If that is the way they have now come to see it, a basic change will be called for in their international relations. Some of the aspects of this change can be imagined, but not all.

Given the lack of a precedent, Soviet behavior has now become less predictable. A number of the more ssuring things that some of us have had to say in recent years about Soviet intentions and reactions may still have validity, or they may not.

All that we can be sure of is that, whatever changes may now occur in Soviet policy, they are unlikely to be agreeable; we will probably learn of them only when we see their effects; we will have lost the possibility of detecting and influencing them in advance through the normal processes of diplomatic communication.

Such are the penalties of a relationship so seriously deteriorated as this one now is. What does this say about American policy toward the Soviet Union in the coming period? There will have to be a recognition that the situation is in several respects one of heightened danger and one that ought not to be permitted to last a moment longer than it has to. A responsible American policy will be one directed to the limitation, and if possible the reduction, of the danger. There is no room for angry polemics and the many recriminations over things past that have marked recent exchanges. Everyone has made his point; there is no need for repetition. Instead there will have to be a search for small steps designed to stabilize the relationship, if only within the present narrow framework.

This requires no dramatization no public airing of disagreements. Least of all does it call for summit meetings or other highly publicized encounters between senior figures. It means meeting the Soviet side at nor-mal levels of communication, avoiding discussions over motivation, sticking to the practical business at hand and seeing whether smaller ar-eas of agreement cannot be found. even where the great ones are lacking Will the Reagan administration to which such quiet diplomacy seems to be foreign, move along this path? A great many people at home and abroad will be watching to see.

Reagan and Marcos

The latest embarrassment to befall President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines is the resignation of all five men he had appointed to investigate the assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino Jr. The live, regarded as Marcos loyalists, were forced out by the public outcry against what is widely seen as a presidential cover-up of the crime.

Meanwhile, in yet another sign that Mr. Marcos is losing the support of the previously faithful, a government lawyer reported finding gunpowder burns — evidence indicating they were armed — on two of the supposedly unarmed guards who had been assigned to escort Mr. Acuino off his plane.

Can Mr. Marcos hang on? He gets a bad press these days, but it is important to remember that he is a shrewd political operator as well as a strongman. He won the presidency in elections twice before imposing martial law in 1972 in what many Filipinos saw as a step saving the country from insurgency and disorder. The police excesses and corruption for which his rule is known have taken place against a backdrop of effective manipulation of the increasingly open Filipino political pro-cess since martial law was lifted in 1981. Mr.

Marcos managed to play the military bases card with Jimmy Carter as well as with Ronald Reagan, which is no mean diplomatic feat. Were it not for Mr. Aquino's death he might still be doing business as usual. The murder of a respected opposition figure just seconds after he returned from three years of American exile did more than galvanize much of the Filipino public. It made it impossible for the United States to ignore the risks of continuing to pin American interests in the Philippines to the fortunes of one aging, arbitrary man.

It is being asked whether President Reagan, in canceling his visit to Manila, pushing for an "independent" Aquino inquiry and so on, is not helping to "destabilize" the Philippines. Some observers are reminded of the policy attributed to his predecessor of using a human rights bludgeon against friendly right-wing regimes in Iran and Nicaragua. But Ronald Reagan's ideological bent is very different, and the Philippines has a respectable democratic experience and base lacking in the other places. Mr. Reagan risks something by going, carefully, with the popular trend of feeling in the Philippines. He risks more by not doing so.

More Inter-Korean Stridency

President Chun has had no hesitation in blaming the [Rangoon] bombing on North Korea. The North Korean government of President Kim II Sung is a particularly unpleasant regime which relies on a personality cult even more odious than those of Stalin and Mao. Such an act of violence would be quite within its abilities. But there are grounds for questioning whether the North Koreans were, in fact, involved. Burma is one of the few Asian countries with which North Korea has good relations and the North Koreans would be unlikely to jeopardize their friendship with the Burmese in such a way. There are moreover a number of minority and other dissident groups within Burma itself which might equally well have been responsible.

Nonetheless, President Chun is likely to stick to his conviction that the North Koreans were behind the bombing, and in one sense it is his conviction that matters. The bombing incident will reinforce the strident anti-communism of the government in South Korea and will probably lead to a further tightening of political control [Yet] the state of confrontation which has existed in the Korean peninsula since the time of the Korean War is of little benefit to any of the principal parties.

For a Martin Luther King Day

Martin Luther King is proving to be nearly as controversial today, 15 years after his death, as he was in the midst of his extended campaign for racial justice. At assue now, however, is not his cause — civil rights for black Americans. On that there exists a remarkable national concensus. Rather, the issue is the desirability of a federal holiday to mark his birthday.

For millions of Americans who believe that his appeal to conscience helped narrow the embarrassing gap between American ideals and American reality, the national holiday is fully justified. We have holidays celebrating the founding of our country, marking veterans' contributions to American freedoms, honoring our first president and so on. But we have nothing commemorating the great struggle for civil rights. The Martin Luther King holiday would rectify this omission.

South African Interlude For Strange Bedfellows

By Helen Suzman APE TOWN — The referendum to be held in South Africa on Nov. 2, in which white voters will be asked to say yes or no to the question posed by the National Party government - "Are you in favor of the implementation of the Constitution 1983 as approved by Parliament?" — has several bizarre aspects.

To begin with, the "colored" and

Asian people who are to be included in the new constitutional proposals will not participate in the referendum, and the blacks, 70 percent of the total population, are excluded both from the referendum and from "Constitution 1983." The new parliament, if set up, will consist of three houses — a House of Assembly for the whites, a House of Representa-tives for the "coloreds" and a House of Delegates for the Asians.

Blacks, the government explains, are already accommodated by local government structures in the urban areas, and nationally by a franchise in their ethnic rural "homelands."

Needless to say, blacks living in townships like Soweto, close to Johannesburg, where many of the million people are third-generation ur-ban-born, laugh at the quaint concept that they should exercise their right to vote in distant tribal areas in which they have never set foot. And homeland leaders like Chief Gatsha Buthelezi of KwaZulu have expressed outrage that blacks are to continue to be denied any say in the parliament that passes the laws that govern their lives.

It is hard to comprehend how South Africa can today in 1983, when racial discrimination is outlawed throughout the civilized world, repeat the cardinal mistake made way back in 1910 when the Union was formed. Another curious aspect of the referendum is the lineup of the yeses and noes. On the yes side are loyal supporters of the National Party goviment, since the new constitution is its brainchild. But also announcing support are some influential Englishlanguage newspapers, traditionally anti-government, together with a considerable number of Englishspeaking South Africans who usually back the official opposition, the Progressive Federal Party, which has fought the new constitutional proposals from the time of their first appearance in Parliament.

And Andries Trearnicht and his supporters in his far-right Conservative Party are voting on the same side as the liberal PFP, but for totally different reasons. The Conservatives whites only. (The PFP doesn't want apartheid at all. The government wants apartheid administered by whites, "coloreds" and Asians.)

There are several reasons for the defection of the people who would normally go along with the PFP. They have fallen for the line put across by government spokesmen (who have a virtual monopoly of the state-owned radio and television) that the new constitutional proposals are a "step in the right direction," a line that has been enthusiastically endorsed in some diplomatic circles. particularly by those in favor of "constructive engagement" with South Africa. This is because of the inclusion of the "coloreds" and Asians. Defectors also cherish the hope that the government has an agenda that will eventually bring blacks into the new dispensation.

Two factors are ignored. First, the powers to be given to the "colored" and Asian houses are so limited that those minorities will not be able to change in any way the three laws they most abominate: the Race Classification Act, which reduces them to second-class citizens, the Group Areas Act, which defines the right to own or occupy property on a racial basis, and the Separate Amenities Act, which lays down that public amenities may be segregated. Second, including blacks in the new dispensation would be totally incompatible with the government's plan of "grand apartheid," to which it firmly adheres. This involves the creation of "independent" black states and the concomitant deprivation of South African citizenship for blacks ethnically connected with such states. Four "independent" black states have already been created, with a fifth in the pipeline, and some 8 million people have already lost their South African citizenship.

Time Out for a World Series By George F. Will

something other than baseball during the wasteland that stretches like the Sahara between the World Series and spring training. Before that long night descends, let me note that the Baltimore Orioles, who have the best record in baseball during nearly the last 27 years, are one of two American institutions of consistent excellence. The other is the telephone company. Washington is fiddling with that, so the Orioles may soon have cornered the market on quality. Considering the way some less-than-excellent players are paid to-day, Joe DiMaggio has a point when he says that if he were negotiating a contract with the owner of the Yankees, George Steinbrenner, he would be able to say, "George, you and I are about to become partners." Oh, for the days of innocence when the Pirates' Honus Wagner, the greatest shortstop ever, rejected a salary offer of $2,000 by declaring: "I won't play for a penny less than $1,500." A National Football League running back got the numbers confused this year when he said his goal was to gain 1,500 yards or 2,000, "whichever comes first."

Amazingly, the beauty of baseball is not apparent to everyone. When baseball gave lifetime passes to the 52 hostages released from Iran, a football fan asked, "Haven't they suffered enough?"

Some critics say baseball is just another opiate of the masses, another of the distractions that American society produces so prolifically, diverting attention from the class struggle or the Iowa caucuses.

BALTIMORE — This writer But not all distractions are created has agreed to think about equal. Some numb the mind (alcoequal. Some numb the mind (alco-hol, the Iowa caucuses); others engage the mind (baseball). It is said that baseball is "only a game." Yes, and the Grand Can-you is only a hole in Arizona. Proof of the genius of ancient Greece is that it understood baseball's future importance. Greek philosophers considered sport a re-ligious and civic — in a word, a moral — undertaking.

Sport, they said, is morally serious because mankind's noblest aim is the loving contemplation of wor-thy things. By witnessing physical grace, the soul comes to understand and love beauty. Seeing persons compete courageously and fairly helps emancipate the individual by ducating his passions.

Professional sports can be a melancholy business because an athlete's career compresses so much of life's trajectory into a short span.
But, as the Pirates' Willie Stargell said, "The umpires always say Play ball." They don't say Work ball." No other team sport is so fascinated with the aging process, perhaps because none is based on skill and timing rather than brute force. No other team sport has so many 15- and even 20-year careers.

Great sporting events unify local communities. For a nation they are exceptions to what sometimes seems to be a rule - that shared experiences are either sad, such as the assassination of President Kennedy, or divisive, such as the firing of General MacArthur. The World Series occurs four times as frequently as the Iowa caucuses. What a wonderful country America is.

WASHINGTON - An administration official has said that the government will continue to enforce controls on U.S. exports after the law authorizing them expires at midnight Friday. With Congress in recess this week, there is no pros-pect that the Export Administration Act will be extended by then.

The official, Under Secretary of Commerce Lionel H. Olmer, specifically warned companies Tuesday against trying to take advantage of the lapse of the law by shipping proscribed products or technical information. The lapse could be as short as two days, until the Senate returns on Monday, or it could extend for weeks.

"What may appear to be a narrow window, temporarily available, will not prove to be there," Mr.

Ohner said. Administration officials said that President Ronald Reagan could give the Commerce Department fresh authority to regulate exports but was unlikely to do so as this would require a declaration that a national emergency exists. Export controls have a variety of applications: the most sensitive are restrictions on the shipment of strategically useful goods and technol-tration Act. The act would have expired Sept. 30 but for a 14-day extension signed by Mr. Reagan. In a separate bill, the House approved a further extension, to Oct. 28, but this awaits Senate action.

Mr. Olmer told members of the National Association of Manufacturers that President Reagan would receive a recommendation this week to invoke the International Economic Emergency Powers Act, a 1977 law under which the president could authorize the continuation of export controls.

But he refused to predict whether Mr. Reagan would accept this recommendation and acknowledged that, if the emergency powers were not invoked, there would be no statute to prohibit or license exports at least until Monday.

The administration appeared to be seeking a commitment from Senate aides to vote promptly on Monday on the House-passed bill extending the Export Administration Act. With the extension, there might be no interruption in the processing of export applications. "We don't issue licenses over the Public recognition has come late milife. And though she has long parkeculoner kenkels been respected by her colleagues. they did not come to recognize the importance of her research to biological thought until recent years. With her discovery that genetic information was not stationary, that it can transpose from one chromosome to another. Thomas Broker, a senior scientist at Cold Spring Harbor, said yesterday that Dr. McClintock "ranks up with Darwin in understanding evolution."

When she enrolled at Cornell University in 1919, she wanted to study plant breeding, but the department would not accept a woman as major, so she majored in botany. She turned to plant genetics as a graduate student at Cornell, where she earned her doctorate in 1927.

For several years she taught and did research at Cornell and other campuses, but was considered too much of a maverick for university life. Out of a job in 1942, she got some timely encouragement from Marcus Rhoades, a colleague from Cornell who was then at Columbia University. He helped her land a research position at the Carnegie Institution's department of genetics, which was at Cold Spring Harbor. It marked the beginning of a long association with Carnegie and the laboratory, which is now an autonomous private institution engaged in basic biological research.

Her early work on anomalies in corn genetics was quickly recog-nized by her election in 1944 to the National Academy of Sciences, only the thrid woman to be so honored at that time. In her acceptance message, she said: "I am not a feminist, but I am always gratified when illogical barriers are broken - for Jews, women, Negroes, etc. It helps us all."

When Dr. McClintock first reported her discovery that genes "jump" around, at a symposium in 1951, she was met with stony silence, according to her biographer, Evelyn Fox Keller. The other scientists either did not understand or would not believe this attack on the orthodox view of stationary genes. No one much believed her or

Finally, in the last 10 years, the revolution in molecular biology brought confirmation of Dr. McClintock's theories. James D. ### Scientists Duplicate 'Splicing' of RNA in Lab

By Harold M. Schmeck Jr.

New York Times Service

N EW YORK — After years of experimentation in the laboratory, research scientists have duplicated one of the most important but mysterious of life processes. They have succeeded in splitting ribonucleic acid (RNA) - a crucial step in the production of protein in all human and animal cells.

A better understanding of the growth, development and the regulation of genes is expected as scientists exploit the technique that made the duplication

The splicing of RNA is often critical to the process by which the instructions of a gene are translated into the production of a product the cell requires. That genes are activated and used. translation, from the message encoded in the gene to action by the cell, is the particular province of RNA. RNA splicing, a natural and almost continuous process in higher organisms, is entirely distinct from the artificial splicing of DNA (deoxyribonncleic acid), cared," said Stephen Blose of Cold the mainstay of recombinant DNA research, known RNA. Later the RNA is used as a template for the Spring Harbor. "It didn't help that popularly as gene splicing. The cutting and recombining manufacture of the cell's characteristic products.

ing of DNA by human intervention has become a vehicle for all manner of research and applications, including the production of human proteins in bacteria and the creation of artificial genes that do not even

But, in terms of the genetic chemistry by which life actually proceeds, DNA is only a part of the story and probably not even the most complex part.

While DNA is the hereditary archive, the repository of all genetic information in living things, RNA carries out the design. RNA controls the production of proteins and other things that give each cell its identity. In some cases it appears to be in the processing of RNA that decisions are made concerning which of a cell's

In the arrangement of the chemical subunits in its long strands, DNA carries the genetic instructions that endow the cell with all its hereditary traits and capabilities. The cell translates these instructions into action by making a copy of the DNA in the form of

Dr. Schwabe broke down the molecular structure of relaxin, a hormone that widens the birth canal in female animals, in the mid-1970s. His new theory of evolution has produced sufficient interest to warrant an $80,000 grant by the National Science Foundation for a detailed study.

The theory, which Dr. Schwabe calls "the genetic potential hypothesis," has drawn a mixed response from the scientific community. "The reaction has ranged from total ridicule to thoughful head shaking to a full embracing," he said in an interview. Dr. Schwabe, who moved from West Germany to the United States in 1956, said his guidence shows a second account walkering. evidence shows several separate molecular events early in Earth's development generated an untold number of independent and continuous lines of descent.

Brighter Outlook for Halley's Comet

PASADENA, California (UPI) — Researchers say Halley's Comer calculated earlier to be barely visible during its next swing around the sun in 1986, will be five to six times brighter than previous estimated,

Speaking at a Jet Propulsion Laboratory conference, the researchers, Charles Mornis and John Bortle, said calculations of Halley's brightness in 1986 had been based on observations made in 1910, when the comet last passed through the inner solar system. They said the 1910 measurements underestimated its true brightness and that the 1986 pass should reveal a showier comet than many had anticipated.

According to earlier estimates, the comet would be barely visible to the unaided eye but Dr. Morris, of the Prospect Hill Observatory in Massack chasetts, said it should seem as bright as Polaris, the pole star.

High-Tech Legs for Amputees

AMBRIDGE, Massachusetts (AP) — Computerized, batterypowered, high-tech artificial legs are being developed by engineers who hope they can give amputees the best substitute yet for nature's own.
The researchers at Massachusetts Institute of Technology have already built several experimental models, including ones that move and flex with their own built-in motors.

"The mainstay of our work is that we want to try to customize legs' behavior to the individual and to what they happen to be trying to do." says Dr. Woodie C. Flowers, a mechanical engineering professor.

Researchers hope this will give amputees the ability to walk more naturally, even up and down stairs.

Dr. Reinhardt M. Kristensen of the University of Copenhagen in Denmark discovered the animal group in sediment samples from around

Alcohol-Gallstone Link Is Seen

J ONDON (AF) — Drinking the equivalent of a half-bottle of wine each day might help prevent gallstones, but heavy drinking could have the opposite effect, British researchers say.

Writing in The Lancet, the British medical journal, doctors at Bristol Royal Infirmary said moderate drinking lowers bile cholesterol saturation, the main cause of gallstones.

"The finding that alcohol lowers bile saturation suggests that regular, moderate drinkers have less of a risk of gallstone formation," the research team reported. But, they said, alcohol in large amounts might actually increase the risk of both gallstones and heart disease.

Little-Known CIA Office Writes Secret Histories

By Ian Black Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON -- Somewhere inside the sprawling headquarters of the Central Intelligence Agency in Langley, Virginia, a small group of professional scholars is producing volume after volume of secret history books that will never be found on the shelves of America's public libraries.

The CIA's historical office, which is little known even inside the agency, is a unique organization with unique problems.

There are a lot of people out there who simply don't want things written down," said one person familiar with the office's work. Under Director William J. Casey, who is an amateur historian, the office has been reborn, three years after it was killed off by internal arguments and lack of funds. "At the moment, the office is undergoing a mild revival," said a government historian in another agency. "How far it will get I couldn't predict. It just depends on who is and who isn't interested in having histories written." The scholar who occupies the CIA's chair of secret history apparently had his doubts as well. Before taking up the post in August 1981, according to a former colleague, Kenneth McDonald kept open his tenure on the faculty of George Washington University. The CIA is proud of him, to judge by the relatively large amount of information the agency divulges about a career that inchides four years in the Marines, degrees from Yale and Oxford and a professorship of strategy at the Naval War College.

But the agency will reveal no details of the work done by Mr. McDonald and three assistants.

Former CIA officials and scholars said the office concentrates more on the structure and organization of the agency than on the history of individual operations. Accounts of past operations, sources said, may be found in the records of other CIA offices.

The only publicly available information about the history program is in a footnote in a volume summarizing almost three decades of the CIA's existence, which was prepared for a 1975 study on U.S. intelligence activities by a Senate commission headed by Frank Church, an Idaho Democrat.

Anne Karalekas, the commission staff member who wrote the study, included among her sources "approximately 75 volumes from the a $220-million purchase of helicopseries of internal CIA histories, a rich if uneven collection of studies which deal with individual agency components, the administrations of the directors of central intelligence, and specialized areas of intelligence analysis."

The historical staff was established under the directorship of General Walter Bedell Smith in 1951, shortly after the CIA evolved from the World War II Office of Strategic Services.

"It has had a checkered history," said one scholar, "flourishing and receding depending on the circumtances

In the mid-1970s, according to sources in the Reagan administration, the CIA office worked well, coordinating its activities with the historical offices of other agencies, especially the State and Defense departments, and helping them de classify CIA-originated material

Under Jack Feiffer, Mr. McDonald's predecessor, "there was a brief flowering of the exchange of information," a State Department historian said. And that, according to another source, "contributed to Feiffer's rapid demise." Around 1978, when an executive order by President Jinnuy Carter complicated the already tangled rules on declassification of government documents, and the CIA budget was slashed, the agency's historical office began to wither. Mr. Feiffer was removed and the office was closed in January 1980.

"A lot of people were horrified that a program that had already been pared down to about one and a haif people should be closed down entirely," said another for-mer CIA official. He said the decision by Stansfield Turner, then the CIA director, was "absolutely barbaric,"

The closing angered other government historians, who lobbied for the office's revival. It reopened, the CIA said, in October 1980.

Mr. McDonald, according to a colleague in another government historical office, "is getting a fine reputation around town as someone who is intelligent and knowledgeable."

Mitterrand Begins Visit To Brussels With Aides

BRUSSELS - President François Mitterrand of France, accompanied by six of his ministers, arrived in Brussels on Wednesday for a three-day state visit.

Talks with Belgian officials will center on increased European integration, cooperation in Africa, NATO missiles in Western Europe, ters and anti-tank missiles by the Belgian Air Force, nuclear plants to be built by France on the Belgian border, and a high-speed train to link Paris with Brussels and Bonn.

Customized Accessories: The Quality Collectibles

By Barbara Maclantin PARIS — The impeccably dressed man who recently asked Jean-Pierre Renard to make him a crocodile briefcase and six matching suitcases — total price, $22,000 — is the sort of person who would always consider buying custom-

But so is the elegant woman who orders a pair of custom-made shoes for $330 at Castelli's because her feet will like them and besides they will last longer than four pairs of fashionable ready-to-wear street. Both know exactly what they want; the ultimate in luxury, perfect comfort, something made especially for them and accessories that will es dure for years and years. II think their name, their taste, is ji as important as anyone else's and they are probably right. Paris of-fers more than the elegant creations of famous couture designers. If also has master craftsmen who do not think any farther shead than their next client, a perfectionist insisting on exquisitely made accessories.

Berluti does not just make shoe

For those who are slightly it would not want to leave the impre sion that they had just discover the elite world of custom-mad this conscientions shoemaker wi specially polish the newly crafter hoes to make them look respect ably old. And when they are worn down a bit, in 10 years, he will resole them and make them look like new, for just $110.

Lobb, the English boot makers have been in Paris since 1900 and in 1973 moved into Hermes, where the chentele has gotten younger but is just as patient — the wait is six to ight months for a pair of beautifully made shoes. The price is $900. Castelli's owner, Salvatori di Geronomo, said many of his wornen clients are tired of having sore feet; the others want something no one else has. "Industrialization has been hard on feet. We make shoes just like in the old days. You cannot work extra soft leather with a machine." Mr. di Geronomo said. The first pair of Castelli handmade shoes costs $300, once the form is made - there are 1,500 in the back room — other pairs cost $220.

One woman wanted a handbag exactly like the 20-year-old rose ostrich bag she had in her hand and another wanted her favorite bag reproduced in four different colors. They get precisely they want within five days from Chichen-Itza. Prices te from $300 to $1,000. "People get attached to beautifully made accessories; when you've had a bag seem that much more," Jacque Lollierou, who is considered one of the best artisans in Paris, said.

Most people who have their loves made by Delrey are not planning on picking nettles like the Greek poet Homer who was the first to sing their praise. Forty peo-ple work with meticulous care to fill a 150 drawers with gloves of every size, color and design and suddenly it is not enough because shotenty it is not enough occause gloves are "in" again. Which is why, even paying $180 dollars for a pair a client will still have to wait for one month for them to be made. "I am seeing as many Americans now as I did before the war; once we have their hand on record they can go home and order by mail? up near the shoulder. Not everyone who wants them can afford them at about $200. But they can have a pair of short peccary gloves for $70."

faces with hats from Paulette de la one $625. Madame Paulette designs hats for Chanel and Clande Montana. From the time she looks at a client's face to decide the shape, the swatch of fabric from the 10 days will have gone by.

Let it rain — and do not worry it will — and Madame Madeleine Gety will make a copy of that fabo ous umbrella left at home or one cently, a cluster of cherries carved out of wood, and made Madame Gely promise to make her another one before she would continue working on her latest film.

The couture perfection found at Sabbia Rosa may be a private luxury, but that should not detract from the pleasure of designing one's own lingeric, including the color, form, how much lace and where. "We show customers existing designs, a color sheet, an assortment of lace and then they can create their own lingerie — it is as personal as you can get and makes a wom

Of the 23 "names" in fashion boutiques, no fewer than 12 have moved into a 500-yard (450-meter) stretch of the Rue de Grenelle beiween the Cercle de la Croix Rouge and the Boulevard Raspail.

The first two arrivals had the strip to themselves for years: Sonia Rykiel in 1968 and Revillon in 1971. Both had discerned a slightly tacky trend developing in the fashion-mad Rue de Sevres a few yards away, and preferred to turn the comer. As Sevres went down-market and the rentals soured, others followed. They bought out cafes, printers, antique dealers and even absorbed the local Tresor Publique tax collection center, creating the best new mix of competitive resources that allows a woman to dress from head to foot.

The shopping trip commences at the Cercle de la Croix Rouge with the furs of Revillon and ends with the boutique of Michel Leger. Here is what the Rue de Grenelle offers in a short, zigzag stroll:

. • No. 2. This branch of Revildon's main store specializes in marmot, in "tweed printed" monton, lambs' fur sweaters and fur-lined coats. Prices begin around 4,600 francs for ones with mock beaver Jining. When faced with Revillon prices two factors should be kept in aind: This is one of the few furriers that buy directly at the international fur auctions so quality is out-standing; secondly, design criteria are studiously established to ensure attracted by wild yet perfectly cothat no style is outdated for four

• No. 3. Facing the furrier is, René Caty's shoe shop, where everything is French-made. Slim pumps are selling at 580 francs, high-heeled lace-up boots at 700 francs and the latest sueded calf, two-tone pumps in regulation black and Havana, black and grey or black and beige at 690 francs. Sonia Rykiel is a faithful client.

No. 6. This is the address from which Rykiel established herself as the unchallenged queen of French jersey fashion and creative knits. She shares No. 6 with Scapa Hommes, a kind of Gallic lvy League men's shop. It is popular with the conservative students of the political science college around the corner, the sons of Raymond Barre, former prime minister, Dior's Marc Bohan, the rising movie actor Francis Huster and the current intellectual superstar of France, Bernard-Henri Levy. Princess Caroline of Monaco and the French singer Sylvie Vartan also shop here for the current men in their lives.

According to Principles of the Control of the Contr See See and a few seeds of the Character • No. 8. It is shoes again, but this time Italian. Guido Pasquali has a hit with his front-slit, low-heeled mocassins for 1,075 francs and his soft pumps on seven-centimeter (nearly three-inch) heels.

No. 10. Emmanuelle Khanh, one of the most recent arrivals, is mostly stocked with Rumanian embroidered shirts, fall herringbone or tweed two-pieces and chenille sweaters. The best of these are of canvases by famous artists such • No. 5. Across the road is ETNO, with an ethnic touch that is presently Japanese. ETNO has beavy winter cottons and skirts rolled around the waist and cinched with obi-size belts, and an African mood is promised for

No. 7. At Maud Frizon, the ectresses Anouk Aimée, Catherine Deneuve and Claudia Cardinale drop in for soft, supple and waffled belts and bags. They turn the corner to 83 Rue des Saints Pères to match them to Frizon's shoes. This is the crossroad dominated

The Twickenham pub. • No. 14. Charles Kammer offers the young kind of "Sacha" footwear with a three-strap sandal on six-centimeter heels for 695 francs. It is the current best-seller in black, grey and a choice of browns.

• No. 11. Emilia scatters his huxury bags, belts and shoes around one of the few spacious boutiques on the street.

No. 20. The first to penetrate beyond the Rue des Saints Pères was Chacok, the south of France designer who succeeded in transplanting Midi fantasies and colors to Paris. Her printed silks, printed satins blended with crepes and rate as the increasingly fashionconscious Socialist, Edith Cresson, minister for foreign trade, and the daughters of formers of foreign trade, and the levy Giscard d'Estaing. (One lot or the other will stop coming when they know.)

• No. 22. Here, Chacok's new junior shop, Fleur de Rhum, commands the same apolitical loyal-ties: Members of the Mitterand family and Princess Hélène of ordinated patchworks, superb embroideries and colorful dresses that marry knit with leather — all with a mild folklore accent.

This street was once an antique dealers' reserve. And one of those not yet bought out has ingeniously joined the fashion binge. Also at No. 22, Birgitta Haga has added to her elegant show of objects some of those superb 19th-century shawls that have become a staple of French dinner parties and theatergoing Authentic paisley designs they range from 2,200 francs through some outsize beauties of the Napoleon III period, which, at 4,800 frames, are big enough to replace a topcost.

 No. 24. The address is shared by Eva Blaise and Chris R, who manage not to tread on each other's turf. Eva is the hot address for original sweaters and silk jersey dresses, in black with boat neckline at around 880 francs. Chris has brought together collections by Su-ziko, Michel Harcourt and André Hayat, all very different members of the same school of laid-back Parking is difficult in the district, and impossible after No. 30, where chanffeur-driven limos, and diplomatic licenseplates hitch up onto the high sidewalks.

No. 31 and No. 37. Claude Montana for women and for men respectively is the draw for the limo crowd. Many buyers are embassy counters making orders for the Middle East, Switzerland or the United States. They arrive with refstriking multihued reproductions fashion magazines and leave after placing literally shipping orders of-ten of six or more ensembles at a colored skirt or pants. The tunic is time. Montana's clothes rate as the most upmarket leather gear in the world. Even the 5,000-franc men's suits in pin-striped banker's gray have collars and shoulder patches in leather.

• No. 35. Between the two Montanas is the offbeat design work of Claude Revillion, all made by craftsmen. Unlined capes in alpaca (2,300 francs) or mohair (1,600 francs) are made by hand. Only a dressmaker could add the encrustations of silk down one side of a 790franc cardigan.

No. 33. A Spanish neighbor.

Robert Verrino, moved in two months ago to add a fresh level of sophisticated sportswear to the "Mode Grenelle." Typical and useful are his black-edged wool wrapover kimono dresses with deep set-in sleeves at 2,500 francs. • No. 39. Michel Klein, who together with Montana and Rykiel, can probably claim the heaviest traffic on the street, is very much the darling of Jardin des Modes and Cosmopolitan magazine readers. He also appeals to the young, successful, dynamic and moneyed French career women and to actresses like Isabelle Adjani, Klein combines style with a contempo-rary cut, full, ample, light and in light-weight, striped tent dresses movement that also fits every body.

Appropriately, the Rue de Grenelle trail ends (or begins) with a new name to watch: Michel Leger, also at No. 42. One of the rare young creators specializing in dressy clothes, he also has the unusual habit of always being on hand. The policy is paying off with his very French clientele of chic 30year-olds responding well to the Fortuny feeling of dresses with tops in finely pleated silk satin, 2,800 francs.

Shrewdly he has hit on wool lace in hazelnut, black, white or grey for Fall party-going, used for T-shirts and sexy sarong skirts knotted to mold the hips. PARIS — "A woman is always safe in blue..."

That kind of musty fashion die taic has always been suspect. But when a woman who has lived, explained and designed fashion for the past three decades insists that the basic wardrobe for a woman in the '80s can be limited to knit, jersey and flannel in just black or blue, it is worth taking a second

This dressing edict comes from Peggy Roche, former mannequin, editor of Elle and, as of two-and-ahalf months ago, designer. She has already attracted international attention in her bontione at 7 Rue du Pré aux Clercs. Private customers are collecting her clothes and store buyers from a dozen countries have placed orders. U.S. stores attracted by her philosophy include Berg-dorf-Goodman, I. Magnin and

Many remember Peggy Roche as a star model at Jacques Heim, Guy Laroche and Hubert de Givenchy. In those days, a mannequin had to stand for hours while couturiers and their aides draped, cut and tacked fabric - sometimes even sewing buttons onto their bodies to create a dress from start to finish. A few thousand hours of that adds up to firsthand experience of fashion in general and how to go about designing it in particular.

From there she moved to Elle in the early '60s. The magazine, then at its most prestigious period, literally re-defined the French fashion magazine giving readers access to style that had previously been reserved for an international minority. During her several years as a ashion journalist, Elle became the blueprint for many other fashion magazines. And after she worked behind the scenes in a range of ready-to-wear groups, she decided to 20 on her own.

Within a week of the September opening, this strictly two-tone winter collection had been bought by private clients including novelist Françoise Sagan, Iñes de la Fressange, the model of the moment, Françoise Fabian, the actress, and Nadine Trintignant, the film direc-

Peggy Roche's mock asymmetric black wool pull.

"Everything is designed to go right through from morning to evening," she said.

She goes just one better than Henry Ford and the first cars he offered in a choice of black or black, and makes it black and navy blue: One shade always trims the other, whichever way you take it.

Flap-fronted sailor pants fastened by gilt buttons are the dominent shape - "because they swing across the years from 16 to 60." Straight but full, they are worn with blazers in superb Racine jer-sey and sell for 1,500 francs. They are fastened low by a single button shaped like a sunburst jewel. Flapfront skirts are 1,350 francs and are matched most often with cardigans piped in satin at 1,650 francs.

The same two-tone policy puts striped sleeve cuffs rolled back just to the elbow.

The newest cardigan shape in Paris is one of the trim little Roche ponchos worn over long booded sweaters. Two-tone also rules at home in jersey housecoats, black or navy piped in gold and closed by a gold tassel belt. At 2,890 francs, it is clearly a unisex shape.

Such thic demands splashes of light and color which she provides with rhinestone jewels, short necklaces of crystal cabochons threaded onto passementerie, and skip-rope pearl necklaces worn with the '30s touch of a big casual knot at the side of the throat. Buyers in town for the prêt-à-

For Innovation and News, Paris Always Leads Way

PARIS - Fashion in Paris is something else again, a case of beyond-the-beyond, a ritual, a cultural phenomenon that occurs at regular intervals. Despite the fact that fashion is fragmented all over the world nowadays, Paris still has magic authority, the ultimate say. For Paris is the only capital in the world with a considerable fashion tradition, backed, as it is by a century of hante couture, which blossomed at the Belle Epoque with Worth, Poiret, Doucet et al. At that time, there were 2,000 fashion houses in Paris, of which 600 were

The French were then supreme in the art of fit, which meant that each and every woman was dressed, from head to toe and from the inside out, with a custom-made precision totally unknown anywhere cise. This idea of fit did not apply to just the dress, but to every single item of clothing, from corsets to petticosts and from hats to gloves. Paris designers did not do it all by themselves; neither did they work in a vacuum. They were in close and constant touch with more than 100 small, gifted artisans who kept producing the various accessories, the trimmings, the fluff so to speak that gilded the fashion hily. Called paruriers, or ornament makers, they were grouped in a federation, and twice a year they each produced a collection that was submitted to the eaders of Paris fashion. These parariers made hats and bags, buttons and belts, veils and ribbons, feathers and flowers and miles of shimmering embroidery. Today, there are only 10 such houses left in Paris, one for each of those specialties. François Lesage, president of the federation of paruners, whose embroidery house supplies most couture and top ready-to-wear designers, said that for the last couple of years he has been working closely with U.S. designers. Before leaving for New York to meet with Bill Blass, Oscar de la Renta, Geoffrey Beene and Calvin Klein, he said: "We are 10 times more expensive than Hong Kong, but the Americans don't seem to mind. What we do, nobody else can do."

As an example, Lesage, whose house is 120 years old and employs 100 people, said that his business still works as it did in the 18th century. To make a collection of 200 samples, which we do twice a year, requires 10,000 hours of work." He added that Calvin Klein's sweaters last season, with embroidered collar and cuffs by Lesage, sold for $5,000. The red-and-black embroidered suit, which looked like a piece of Boulle furniture and which Karl Lagerfeld designed for Chanel, required 1,000 works of embroidery — and cost 400,000 francs, about $50,000, Lagerfeld said. (Yes, there was somebody to buy it, a wealthy American from Houston, Texas.) This kind of dedication is hard to beat. The Paris artisans also have couture is not the Folies Bergère." In preparation for an exhibit on the theme, "Embroidery Through Schiaparelli," to be beld at the Musée Gailiera next year, Lesage said he will have to look through 90,000 documents on the subject. "We did wonderful things for Schiapareli." he said. "We even embroidered a lettuce that she picked up at the market and used as a hat."

There is also the fact that the French provide almost instant service.
"When Saint Laurent calls me in the middle of the night and says toreador,' two days later I am able to give him toreador embroidery."

"In New York, designers do work in a vacuum. They deal with importers who do their buying a year in advance. Designers do not enjoy the same kind of instant artistic support. And, as you know, in creation, the best ideas often come at the last minute." As a result, and to play it safe, Lesage said Calvin Klein ordered 600,000 francs worth of embroidery last season, of which he used only one-third.

To this day, the French also make the most beautiful dresses in the world. It may be because while tailors seem to abound everywhere, Paris is the place where they know best how to handle frou, or finid fabrics, a tradition set by Madeleine Vionnet, whose draping on the bias was famous, and is still carried on today by Madame Gres.

Finally, the French do not know how to make separates, or bits and pieces that are the essence of sportswear. But, with a knack for color and proportion, they are unique in creating a whole silhonette. Even better, they seem to be the only ones who start with a vision of the ideal woman and are then able to translate their fantasies into fashion -HEBE DORSEY

A.H. Robins Stock Near 10-Year High Despite Its Dalkon Shield Problems

EW YORK —Last week, 243 issues posted new highs for the last 52 weeks or longer on the New York Stock Exchange. Electric utilities were well represented, thanks to renewed buying of moderate-growth, interest-sensitive shares. International Business Machines, the pacesetter of the bull market, rose to records,

Also appearing on the records list were Bristol-Myers, recommended lately by several brokerage firms, and United Telecommunications, a stock that fits nearly into the telecommunications group, which is growing in popularity. Pharmaceutical companies seem periodically to run into problems concerning their products. At the start of September, for example, Merck & Co. temporarily suspended overseas sales of its new measured-release form of an anti-arthritic drug in response to reports of unexpected side torm or an anu-arunnae uses in response to the produced a temporary effects to the medicine. That amountement produced a temporary reaction in Merck's stock, which numbled $4,625, to $91.75, Sept. 1. Wednesday, Merck closed at $100, down 25 cents, on the Big Board.

On this count, too, Robins deserves notice, for it has endured a long-running problem with a product — its Dalkon Shield intranterine device that is no longer on the market. The Dalkon Smean possing of extensive litigation and expense for Robins and even today, as Standard & Poor's points out, "uncertainties remain as to the extent of charges" related to this litigation. What is certain, however, is that Robins's auditors issued a qualified opinion on the company's 1982 financial statements, subject to the outcome of this matter.

> In last year's annual report, the company itself stated: "If 1982 had a dark side, it was the Dalkon Shield litigation. The number of uninsured cases continues to increase, and as these cases mature, any awards and expenses associated with their disposition will have to be paid by the company. We therefore expect this litigation to adversely impact earnings in each of the next several years."

Confidence Expressed

Management added that "the shadow of the Dalkon Shield notwithstanding, we remain confident about the future of the company."

As of the end of 1982, according to S&P, Robins and its insurer had paid $130 million in disposing of 5,100 claims charging injuries from use of the Dalkon Shield. "About 3,300 cases and claims were still pending, at the and the second of the second many of which were not covered by insurance," the advisory service added. Meanwhile, company profits rose last year to $1.98 a share from ... .. ...... 4 Laupper: $1.77 in 1981 and $1.01 in 1980.

Two weeks ago, Rotan Mosle Inc., a Houston-based firm, recommended purchase of Robins's stock and forecast "above-average earnings growth of 16 percent annually over the next five years." It estimates profits at $2.45 a share for 1983 and at $2.75 next year. These projections are in line with those at Merrill Lynch.

Finally, for armchair stock-market chartists, Robins holds interest. Its shares plunged from a high of $40.75 in 1973 to $8.125 the following year. Thereupon, the stock formed a long base within a narrow trading range until 1982. Such a "half-sancer pattern" is regarded by many technical analysts as forming a potentially favorable chart - provided that good news is forthcoming from a company to send the stock higher.

International Herald Tribune
STOCKHOLM — Datatronic, a distributor of Commodore computers in Sweden that has turned software company, plans to enter the U.S. market with its own word-processing and data-base programs in the next few weeks and will sell 20 percent of its shares to U.S. investors sometime after Jan.

The company will point to its rapid sales and earnings growth and its experience developing software for the market in Sweden, which has one of the world's most "computer-dense" societies.

Mats Gabrielsson, Datatronic's 33-year-old president, is convinced that the company's future ies in the U.S. market. Once Datatronic is established there, it plans to develop and market programs, including those for sophisticated games, aimed at the low-priced end of the market, exclusively for users of Commodore home and personal

I hope to be a substantial factor in the software business in the U.S.," said Mr. Gabrielsson, a graduate of Stockholm's prestigious Handelshögs-kolan business school who is not a computer engineer. Mr. Gabrielsson predicts that "there will be five or six very big software companies in the U.S. [in a few years] and I hope to be one of them."

Datatronic is setting up a software-development company and a marketing unit in the United States and will move some of its key project managers there. It will offer a low-priced package of pro-grams, including its Calc Result spreadsheet, the new World Result text editor and its Base Result data base.

brielsson recently raised his 1983 pretax profit forecast to 40.3 million kronor (about $5.2 million) from 27 million kronor. First-half pretax earnings nearly tripled, to 14.9 million kronor, and sales

With the selection of an investment bank to float Datatronic's American Depositary Receipts in its final stages and with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission looking on Datatronic's president is understandably reluctant to make any earnings predictions for 1984. But he notes that the ADR issue is timed so that complete results for 1983 will be in before Datatronic ADRs are offered to U.S. investors.

(An ADR is a substitute certificate for a foreign company's stock held in trust by a U.S. bank, which issues receipts for the stock that are then traded on U.S. markets much like shares of domes-

Mr. Gabrielsson says that several banks and brokerages eagerly came to him when they heard that Datatronic was interested in launching an ADR issue. But some analysts of Scandinavian shares in London are a little skeptical about computer-related shares generally and unfamiliar with

"Datatronic?" asked Michael Willis Fleming of E.B. Savory Milln, "We have no opinion at this stage." But Mr. Fleming, a partner in the brokerage who admitted he was not a specialist in computer shares, said the market was a little worried about computer-related stocks after the widely publicized problems at Osborne, Texas Instru-ments, Atari and Apple in the United States.

An analyst at another well-known London trader in Scandinavian shares also said: "We haven't examined this company," but said that Datatronic could be "a sleeping beauty."

Terms of the pact were not formally announced, but Mark Hunziker, a union spokesman, said the flight attendants won a 16.5-percent raise for 1983 that will be retroactive to Jan. I, 1983, plus a 6-percent raise for 1984.

The flight attendants, who had worked without a contract for 19 months, had wanted a retroactive raise for 1982 but did not get it, he

Rate Concerns Propel Dollar

United Press Internation NEW YORK - The dollar surged Wednesday in a brying spree sparked by international tensions and interest-rate concerns that caught much of the market by surprise. Gold prices

A Barclays Bank International dealer in London said, "Middle East tensions over oil supplies helped boost the dollar." But James McGroarty, vice president at Discount Corp. of New York, said, "There have been several factors this week that convinced the market may-be it sold the dollar too quickly. Signals from the Fed that interest rates will not go down against a backdrop of the Iran-Iraq situation, Lebanon and other international tensions produced a lot of short-covering," Mr. McGroarty said. The dollar ended the day in New York at 2.6162 Deutsche marks, up from Tuesday's 2.5995, and at 234.52 yen, up

NEWPORT, Rhode Island -The doorman at the Sheraton Hotel wanted to know the meaning of "Ausgezeichnet!" - the German word emblazoned on the back windows of 54 new Volkswagens brought bere for a 1984-model pre-

"I think it means 'excellent," one hotel guest responded. "No, it's closer to 'outstanding." said another. "Oh," the doorman said, and walked away, unimpressed.

If the doorman's response to the slogan and its symbolism is a fair sampling of the public's artitude, it could doom Volkswagen's efforts to regain prominence in the United States, where it once was the king

VW, the West German automaker that brought America the low-cost, durable Beetle, is in trouble. The company's share of the U.S. auto market --- including dom cally produced and imported VWs —is 1.8 percent. That's down from 6.7 percent in 1970, when VW filled its U.S. showrooms with imports only. Also, many of VW's onceloyal dealers are using Japanese cars to boost sales volume.

VW's 1984 products are solid performers, but they mostly are repeats of what began rolling off the company's assembly lines several years ago. Even VW officials ede that, in the United States, 1984 will be a "bridge year," a period to get through with the products they have until the 1985 model year, when VW will introduce a newer version of its Rabbit, already selling in West Germany as

VW always has been refuctant to change body styles or tinker with gadgetry, a policy that served the company well in the days when the Beetle, with its distinctive shape and charming quirks, had no com-petition. But VW's continued refusal to play with sheet metal seems to be hurring the company today, largely because there are so many other cars that look like VWs and that can compete with VWs in performance and price, industry ana-

So, instead of showing off new body styles or talking about significantly different engines and sus-pension systems, VW this year is

The idea is to capitalize on what VW officials say is a strong U.S. belief that German engineering means superior quality.
"It's not a car," say the new VW

But it's a last-chance strategy, say some auto-industry analysis, and it may be too late.

and it may be too late.

"Volkswagen easily could have traded on that theme 10 years ago. But it's a fading image now. The quality image of Teutonic engineering essentially has been taken over by the Japanese," said J. David Power, president of J.D. Power & Associates, an auto-market received from head in Mentiles 15. search firm based in Westlake Village, California

Not so, said Noel Phillips, president of Volkswagen of America, VW's U.S. manufacturing and sales
subsidiary. VW's emphasis on its German heritage "on balance is the strongest marketing platform that we can use in this marketplace," Mr. Phillips said.

But VW's target customers — young, well-educated, upwardly mobile Americans — have been taking their dollars elsewhere. The more affinent among them are buying Volvo, the best-selling European nameplate in the United States. Others have demonstrated a penchant for BMW and Mercedes-

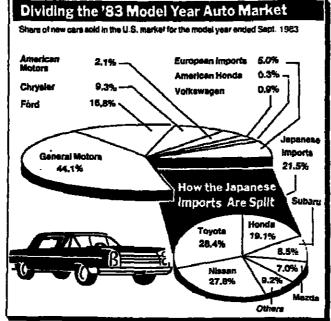

And the vast majority of VW's target group, as indicated by the 22-percent share of the domestic market enjoyed by Japanese auto-makers, are buying Hondas, Mazdas, Datsuns and Toyotas.

"VW has been sort of caught in a position where they're neither an economy-car company that can compete easily with something like the Beetle or the Rabbit, nor are they a luxury-car company that can compete effectively against products like Volvo. At the moment, Volkswagen is neither here nor there," Mr. Power said. VW officials, including Mr. Phillips, grudgingly agree with some aspects of Mr. Power's analysis.

Most of the criticism of VW's performance in the United States stems from the company's handling of the Rabbit, particularly the high--fuel-efficient Rabbit diesel, Mr. Phillips said selling car around for a while," said David Healy, auto analyst with New York-based Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. But he said VW stuck with the Rabbit too long, made too few visible changes, and insisted on charging a "premium price" for the car even though it was challenged by Japanese models.

The mistake VW made was to allow itself, in effect, to become regarded as "The Rabbit Company," Mr. Phillips said.

"It's the old story about having all of your eggs in one basket," he said. "It's a very dangerous situation to be in. And we, as a corpora-tion, have suffered for one simple reason above all else in the last couple of years, and that is that we had a total emphasis, not only on the Rabbit, but on the Rabbit die-

The diesel became an absolute obsession of everyone in the days when the gas crisis had everyone involved in economy motoring," said Mr. Phillips. "Oh, we put a big. big emphasis on the diesels. In fact, more than 50 percent of the Rab-bits that were being sold were with diesel engines.

"But, suddenly, one day, the market changed, and people weren't so much interested in economy motoring or diesels anymore. They weren't interested in anyone's diesels, it seemed. The diesel sales went down, and our corporate performance went down with it."

Now, VW is stressing its corporate identity, "the tradition of valve, quality and consistency Volkswagen stands for," Mr. Philquality and consistency that lips said. And along with that, VW will stress "the fact that the company has a much better balance, a fine range of products," he said, "We cluding the newer, high-performance, gasoline-powered GTI models, are produced at VW's modeis. plant in Westmoreland, Pennsylvania. The plant recently has been working one shift because of the dramatic decline of diesel Rabbit sales, down 63 percent so far this year from 1982 levels. Sales of gasoline-powered Rabbits, led by the GTI, have increased 29.3 percent

VW's other major car lines include the mid-size Jetta and the luxury Quantum. Those cars sold poorly in 1983, largely because of price. For example, a 1.6-liter, diesel-powered, two-door Jetta sold for about $8,490 this year. VW is knocking $1,100 off that price to pur sales of comparably equipped 1984 models.

VW officials say their company cannot return to the days of the under-$5,000 car, strongly indicat ing that, at least in the United States, the company will abandon its fight for the low-end market. We don't build a $4,800 car anymore because we just can't do it. It would be an ersatz kind of car. We could not make it a rea Volkswagen at that price," said James Fuller, a VW vice president.

The low end will be left to the Japanese, to companies such a Isuzu and Suzuki, both of which have a tentative agreement with General Motors Corp. to ship in a total of 300,000 subcompact cars for the 1985 model year.

The Japanese also have poised themselves to grab those Americans shopping for cars with super fuel economy. Volkswagen, long the fuel-economy leader, tradition

Economic growth, he predicted will likely settle down into the 4-5 percent range next year, following the robust 9.7 percent rate in the second quarter and the nearly 7 percent rate in the latest quarter.

"This relatively strong growth will enable unemployment rates to fall further, but they are not likely to fall below 8 percent," he said. The bank economist predicted that inflation would rise, but "will remain moderate," partly because of the large extent of excess factory and domestic competition among

Mr. Jordan, who is now a professor at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque, also said the Federal Reserve has adopted "very rapid monetary growth targets for all of 1983 and their rationalizations as to why it will not be inflationary are not convincing.

The best that Datatronic could hope for is a boost in U.S. homecomputer sales around Christmas to lift some of the general gloom about the sector on the U.S. stock markets, the analyst maintained. Mr. Gabrielsson maintained that

Datatronic is not like the other software houses with which it would be competing. The creative part with us is about 60 software people," he said. "There are few software houses who have so many guys in the microcomputer field." Mr. Gabrielsson thinks that "user friendliness" is the key to selling software to a mass market consisting almost entirely of lay-men. "When you are buying the software piece, all you have to know is one and one equals two. When you learn more, the software will upgrade itself," he said when asked how future Datatronic prodnots would be designed. Mr. Gabrielsson said it would mostly invoive making systems that teach people to use them and are adaptable to a user's educational level.

The education part will be 90 percent tomorrow, today it is around 10 percent," he predicted. He also believes that the company's exclusive focus on Commodore's PET, Vic-20 and Vic-64 computers won't change. "There is a lot of room for an independent software maker if you do it well on one machine," Mr. Gabrielsson In Sweden, Mr. Gabrielsson's plans to shift the center of Datatronic's operation to the United States have stirred controversy because the company is portrayed as trying to escape from a planned system of "wage-earner" funds to be managed by union-dominated boards. The five regional wage-earner funds proposed by Sweden's Social Democratic government would buy shares in Swedish businesses with the proceeds from a levy on busines profits and wages. Mr. Gabrielsson did not deny that wage-carner funds, which will Japan Firett probably be started in early 1984. have speeded his plan to move into the U.S. market, but he stresses the Work in Resident scheme wasn't decisive. "This is only tax planning," he said.

NOTICE OF REDEMPTION OF Dart Industries Inc.

43/4 % Subordinated Debentures due August 15, 1987

Exchangeable on and after September I, 1973

for common stock of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company

Redemption Date: November 14, 1983

Exchange Right Expires: November 14, 1983 NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to the holders of the 44/1% Subordinated Debeutures due August 15, 1987 (the "Debentures") of Dart Industries Inc. (the "Company") exchangeable on and after September 1, 1973 for common stock of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company that, pursuant to the provisions of the indenture dated as of August 16, 1972 (the "Indenture") between the Company and Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, Trustee, the Company has elected to redeem all the outstanding Debentures on November 14, 1983 (the "Redemption Date") at a redemption price of 100% of the principal amount thereof, together with accrued interest from August 15, 1983 to the Redemption Date in the amount of $12.01 for each $1,000 principal amount. Payment of the redemption price and accrued interest, which will aggregate $1,012.01 for each $1,000 principal amount. of Debentures, will be made on or after the Redemption Date upon presentation and surrender of the Debentures together with all coupons appertaining thereto maturing after the Redemption Date at the offices of any one of the Paying and Exchange Agents set forth below.

The Debentures will no longer be outstanding after the date fixed for redemption. The redemption price will become due and payable upon each Debenture on the Redemption Date and interest thereon shall cease to accrue on and after the Redemption Date.

ALTERNATIVE TO REDEMPTION Holders of Debentures have the right on or before the close of business on November 14, 1983, to exchange the Debentures for common stock of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company (the "Common Stock").

The Debentures may be exchanged for Common Stock at the rate of 10.10 shares for each $1.000 principal amount of Debentures. In order to effect this exchange, a Debenture holder should complete, sign and surrender to any one of the Paying and Exchange Agents either the NOTICE OF ELECTION TO EXCHANGE on the Debentures or a similar notice together with the Debentures to be exchanged. A holder who surrenders Debentures for exchange will receive a certificate for the full number of whole shares to which he is entitled. No fractional shares of Common Stock will be issued upon exchange of any Debentures, but in lieu thereof the Company will pay in United States dollars an amount equal to the market value of such fractional shares computed on the basis of the closing price of the Common Stock on the New York Stock Exchange on the last business day before the date of exchange. If more than one Debenture shall be delivered for exchange at one time by the same holder, the number of full shares which shall be issuable or deliverable upon exchange shall be computed on the basis of the aggregate principal amount of Debentures so delivered. The exchange will be deemed to have been effected immediately prior to the close of business on the date on which the Paying and Exchange Agents receive such NOTICE OF ELECTION TO EXCHANGE or similar notice and the Debentures surrendered for exchange. Upon exchange of Debentures no payment or adjustment will be made for interest accrued thereon or on account of any cash dividends on the Common Stock delivered upon such exchange. Debentures delivered for exchange must be accompanied by all interest coupons maturing on and after August 15, 1984.

The closing price of the Common Stock on October 6, 1983, as reported in the Composite Tape

The closing price of the Common Stock on October 6, 1983, as reported in the Composite Tape for New York Stock Exchange-Listed Stocks, was $89.13 per share. At such price, the holder of $1,000 principal amount of Debentures would receive upon exchange shares of Common Stock and cash for the fractional interest having an aggregate value of $900.16. However, such value is subject to change depending on changes in the market value of the Common Stock.

to change depending on changes in the market value of the Common Stock.

SO LONG AS THE MARKET PRICE OF THE COMMON STOCK DOES NOT EXCEED $100.19 PER SHARE, HOLDERS OF DEBENTURES UPON EXCHANGE WILL RECEIVE COMMON STOCK AND CASH IN LIEU OF ANY FRACTIONAL SHARE HAVING AN AGGREGATE MARKET VALUE OF LESS THAN THE CASH WHICH THEY WOULD RECEIVE UPON Delivery of Debentures to any one of the Paying and Exchange Agents after the close of business on November 14, 1983, regardless of instructions in any notice, will result in payment of the redemption price of 100% of the principal amount of the Debentures together with accrued interest to November 14, 1983.

Bache Manager Accused | Peugeot Gains In $5-Million N.Y. Theft

By Michael Blumstein

New York Times Service NEW YORK - A manager in the stock dividend department of Prudential-Bache Securities has been charged in connection with the theft of more than $5 million from the investment firm, the Federal Bureau of Investigation said. The reported theft, in which three other men were also arrested Tuesday, involved the transfer of funds from Prudential-Bache to bank accounts controlled by those who were arrested, the FBI said The FBI said its two-week-old investigation would continue, with further arrests possible. The losses at Prudential-Bache, one of the largest U.S. brokerage firms and a subsidiary of Prudential Insurance Co., could total $15 million and date back 18 months, a source close to the investigation said.

Peter Costiglio, a spokesman for Prudential-Bache, said none of the stolen money came from customer accounts and that the losses were covered by an insurance policy with Aetna Life & Casualty Co.

The FBI said that since January John Elfer, a section manager in the stock dividend department, authorized the payment of 60 checks totaling about $5 million to five corporate accounts at Bank Leumi Trust Co. The stock dividend department distributes dividends paid on shares that the company is holding for either its customers or its own accounts.

None of the five corporations did business with Prudential-Bache, Joseph A. Valiquette, an FBI spokesman, said. The three others charged with Mr. Elfer withdrew money from the Bank Leumi accounts, with some of the money winding up in the Ramapo Bank in Wayne, New Jersey, Mr. Valiquette

Mr. Effer, a 10-year employee of the firm, is 38 years old and resides in New York City, the FBI said. He was charged with conspiracy and the interstate transporation of stolen money, the bureau said. Federal Magistrate Ruth V. Washington ordered him held at the Metropolitan Correctional Center on a $1million personal recognizance plant, the ministry anno Wednesday.

The three other men were identified as Peter Sapone, 40, of New York City; Robert Chiacchio, 34, of Staten Island, New York; and Larry Monteforte, 41, of Edison, New Jersey. They did not work for the firm and were charged with conspiracy, the FBI spokesman said. The three were released on bond pending a hearing Oct. 31.

All four surrendered to the FBI in Manhattan at about 10 a.m. Tuesday, Mr. Valiquette said. Mr. Costiglio said Prudential-Bache, having noticed irregularities in its stock dividend department, notified the bureau about two weeks ago. "It is an unfortunate and an unusual set of circumstances," he said. "We think that it's highly unlikely that it could happen again. PARIS - France's labor minister, Jack Ralite, has ap-proved early retirements for 4,635 workers at Automobiles Peugeot and its Talbot subsidiary but has rejected a request for permission to lay off 2,905 employees at Talbot's Poissy

Government sources, howev er, said rejection of the layoff lan may be reconsidered if Talbot comes up with a "satifactory social program" aimed at retraining furloughed work-

Pengeor's announcement in July that it planned to cut almost 10 percent of the work force at the two companies has been strongly criticized by trade unions. The Labor Ministry said the early retirements were neces-sary because of overemployment at the two companies, but it added that because the Talbot layoffs are of national importance the government intends to obtain from Peugeot clear commitments for the future of the Poissy plant.

Automobiles Peugeot, a division of Peugeot, lost 1,29 billion francs ($163.3 million) in 1982 after a 2.13-billion loss in 1981.

New Home Computer in 1983 $119.2 million, which it attributed

By N.R. Kleinfield New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Texas Instruments Inc. has announced that, contrary to expectations, it will not introduce a new home computer this year.

The announcement Tuesday gave rise to conjecture that the company may be significantly scaling back its home computer program or even preparing to bow out of the market. Deep price cuts and a flood of products have made the ous for many manufacturers.

Other analysts suggested that the company may be waiting for Inter-national Business Machines Corp. to introduce its eagerly awaited personal computer, called the Peanut, so that Texas Instruments can make its machine compatible with "A decision has been made that for the balance of this year, which carries through the peak Christmas season, there will not be an introduction of a new home computer console," said Norman Neureiter, a company spokesman, in response to an inquiry. "We've decided we will concentrate our efforts on the 99/4a this year."

Sales of Texas Instruments' current home computer, the 99/4a, have been far more sluggish than the company had anticipated. It reported a second-quarter loss of months earlier to a sudden plunge in sales of home

TI Says It Will Not Introduce

In June, after the company annonnced it would have a loss for the second quarter, its stock fell by more than $50 in two days, to $107. It has been selling for around $120

Texas Instruments had been widely expected to introduce a more powerful and more expensive machine, known as the 99/8 and code-named the "Armadillo," at home computer business hazard- the Consumer Electronics Show in June. Though it was shown to some select customers, it was not dis-played publicly and the company has never announced any plans for the computer.

[The company, however, said Wednesday that it is not introducing a new home computer this year because such a machine never existed in the first place, The Associated Press reported from Dallas.

Wholesale Prices Rise in Italy

ROME - Italian wholesale prices rose 0.8 percent in August after a 0.7-percent rise in July, the National Statistics Institute said Wednesday. The institute said wholesale prices were 8.7 percent higher in August than they were 12

["The company has never officially announced such a product or said when it may be available," Mr.

Neureiter said.] "I think this is going to be interpreted by Wall Street that they're not going to participate in the home computer business," said Mi-chael Krasko, a securities analyst at L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin. "If they don't come out with new product, that tells the marketplace that they're not going to play the game. I think that will be perceived positively by the Street." Vincent Glinski, an analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert, said he thought that Texas Instruments may be redesigning the 99/8 so that it will be compatible with the Pea-nut. As originally designed, the 99/8 was based on Texas Instraments microcomputers; the Peanut uses an intel microcom

Mr. Glinski said it was possible that Texas Instruments may drop out of the home computer business but still continue to compete in the educational market.

"Considering that it's Oct. 11, it would be a little late to introduce a product anyway," said Stuart Johnson, an analyst at Wertheim & Co. "It would tend to get in the way of other products. This shouldn't affect the company's finances. The question is whether the existing inventory of the 99/4a is going to be

THE CHINESE BLACK CHAMBER: An Adventure in Espionage

By Herbert O. Yardley. Introduction by James Bamford, 225 pp. Illustrated, $13.95. Houghton Mifflin, One Beacen St., Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by

Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

THERE'S a scene in this China diary that I some readers may find hard to believe. In fact there are a number of such sepnes in this journal, but this one struck me as particularly hard to credit. It concerns an evening spent with a rich man's concubine known as Mama who had come to the author's quarters to find out when he would deliver on a promise to secure a set of riding habits for her and her daughter. After removing her gown and per-forming some "gymnastic exercises," Mama, "perhaps to make sure that she and Daughter got their riding habits," proceeded to remove the rest of her clothes, stretch out on the author's box couch, and motion him to lie beside her.

But as he approached, Mama finished with fright at something she saw across the room. When the author turned to look, he made out, silhonetted in the window, the shaved head of his new chanffeur, Fen Tao. "Peeping is a common frailty," the author writes, "and I'm not above it myself, but Fen Tao's insolence had gone too far. As he blinked, endeavoring to see into the darkened room, I reached for my snub-nosed automatic, took careful aim at a hand grasping the window ledge, and fired. The hands slipped from the window ledge, and Fen Tao, like the Monk of Siberia, disappeared with a 'hell of a yell,' his body crashing through the bamboo shelter. Loud screams and the hullabaloo of servants ensued."

Now this may strike one as the most egre-gious of tall tales, especially when the aftermath turns out to be that the author was chided by his superiors for merely shooting off the chanffeur's finger instead of killing him. But you have to take into account the time and setting of the incident — Chonaging, China, in 1939. It was a time when civil war between the Nationalists and the Communists, and to mention invasion by the Japanese, was tearing apart the already fraying fabric of traditional China. Chongoing, then called Changking, was under daily threat of bombing by the Japanese. Food was scarce. Inflation was rampani Death was imminent. These conditions served to exacerbate a traditionally dog-eat-dog way

And then you have to consider that the writer of the account is the late Herbert Osborn Yardley, As James Bamford, author of "The Puzzle Palace," puts it in his introduction to "The Chinese Black Chamber": "In the black and gray world of espionage and code-breaking, Herbert O. Yardley was a Calder mobile of bright bold colors. He was a free spirit in a land of cenobites."

Herbert Yardley was the United States's foremost cryptographer. As the organizer, in June 1917, of Section Eight of Military Intelligence (MI-8), he forged the first link in what James Bamford calls "the long genealogical chain that would eventually lead to the present National Security Agency." He was a genius at breaking codes who was forced out of government service when then-Secretary of State

Henry L. Stimson issued his famous 1929 directive. "Gentlemen do not read each other's mail." At that time he turned to writing and produced such successful books as "The American Black Chamber," "The Blonde Countess" and "Red Sun of Nippon."

Eventually hiring himself out as confidential cryptologic adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, Yardley became a favorite character among old China hands. He even appears in a book as late as Theodore H. White's "in Search of History" (1978) as "a man of broad humor and unrestrained enthusiasms," among which "were drink, gambling and women." Yardley also happens to have written "The Education of a Poker Player," which, if it advocates a style too conservative for Friday-night penny ante, is easily the most entertaining poker book I know of.

So you tend to believe the stories that Yardley tells in "The Chinese Black Chamber," which was written 42 years ago and suppress until now because of Washington's nervousness about giving away cryptographic secrets. You believe his detailed accounts of breaking codes, especially the one that a character known as The One-Armed Bandit was using based on Pearl Buck's novel about China, "The Good Earth." You believe his story of escorting a Chinese woman home and learning later in the evening that her father had strangled her in the evening that her father had strangled her to death for keeping company with a foreign devil. You believe his loathing for conditions in China, and his prediction that while "China is in the process of change," it will not become what "the Western world, with its ideals of democracy and equality, has been led to ex-

There are two photographs of Yardley in the book, one taken before and one taken after his China experience. In the first he looks brighteyed and expectant. In the second he looks like a tired businessman. You believe that China made Herbert Yardley sick.

And even if you don't believe him, he's such a good storyteller that you have to read him anyway. There are good punch lines even when he's setting us up for an anecdote. There's also a poker game, and I'm sorry to have to report that Yardley cheats in it by picking up exposed discards, memorizing the sequence of the cards and then giving the deck false shuffles. Burit was in a good cause. He was trying to some money so that one of his interpreters could asset the cards and the cards are the cards are cards. afford to inoculate his three older children against the diphthena that his youngest one had caught. Such medical hygiene was not something that an above-average Chinese wa earner could afford at that time.

The Associated Press SYDNEY - A stamp marking Austria

It's victory in the America's Cup went origine Wednesday and many post offices reported selling out before lunch. The stamp feethers the cup against a backdrop of Australian flags and an accompanying cover featuring the victorious yacht, Australia II. A post office spokesman, Jonathan Giles, said sales had gone "as fast as the winged keel itself," refer-ring to the yacht's special design, which figured in its defeat of the American defender Liberty.

Phillies' sixth, McGregor was not so fortunate. He got ahead of 40-year-old Morgan in the count, 1-2. However, in both his previous at bats, Morgan had proved a tough out with two strikes, fouling off four fast balls high in the strike

After all that high heat, McGregor tried a sweeping curve ball to the little lefty — the same pitch that Pittsburgh's Willie Stargell hit over the wall for a game-wint run off McGregor in the seventh game of the '79 Series.

Morgan got his arms extended and golfed a line drive toward the 376-foot sign. As Morgan's drive zipped over the fence, the Phillies leaped for joy in their dugout.
The 1-1 tie did not last long. Like many a control pitcher, McGregor has a habit of starting many innings with a low fast ball strike, especially if the hitter is not a slugger. It's a sort of neutral opening. Most batters take the first pitch, especially to lead off. Also, pitchers make good livings off batters who swing at such pitches. On the other hand, in a 1-1 Series game, a hitter is glad to get any-thing that looks like a hittable pitch. When Maddox stepped to the plate to open the eighth, McGregor hummed his fast ball, a couple of inches above the knees. A moment later, Maddox hit McGregor's pitch 10 rows up into the left field bleachers above the 360-foot sign to give the Phillies a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Belgium had still to play its Group I match against Scotland in Glasgow later Wednesday when Switzerland fell, 3-0, to the East Germans in East Berlin and ended its slim hopes of qualifying for the finals. Scoring for East Germany were Hans Richter, Rainer Ernst and Joschim Streich. Belgium, beaten by West Germany in the last European championship final in Rome three years ago, went into its match against Scotland with eight points from four matches — at least four more than anyone else. With the loss, the Swiss record fell to four points

The outcome completed an unhopes of qualifying alive usual double for Belgium, who were the first European team to win Danes have nine were the first European team to win through qualifying rounds to the gainst Luxembourg on World Cup finals in Spain last year.

Meanwhile, Belgium became the Selcuk in the 17th minute.

With the memory of the 1980 boycott of the Moscow Olympics downing of the South Korean jetliner fueling outrage, questions have been raised about whether the Soviet Union might decide not to

It is widely believed that barring any further deterioration in international relations, the Soviet Union has too much to gain by coming to the Olympics. Dimitri K. Simes, a Soviet emigré and a professor at Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, said, "They take it very seriously. It is more important to them than ever before. In the past, when things were going well, athletics were useful but not indispensable.

Now, nothing works. "Athletics is one area where they are still self-confident, one area where they can beat the United States and on the American soil Does anyone think they are going to deny themselves that pleasure There would be only one reason: if they did not do well in competitions before."

Although the Soviet Union has withdrawn from, or been canceled from, at least five pre-Olympic events, Vladimir Mikoyan, press officer at the Soviet Embassy here said, "None of the countries is obliged to state its willingness to participate before the set date [June 2]. It is absolutely incorrect to construe the silence of the Soviet Union as an unwillingness to

Then they advertised you could take all your children with you. And finally, during the recession, they let you take all the people that you had met in a bar. There wasn't an empty seat on the plane, but there was only one pay-

To make things worse, the little guys started taking on the big boys and price-cut the hell out of them. The little guys were nonunion, nofrill companies who offered you nothing but a seat. But for $39 you could fly from New York to Los Angeles with a layover in New-foundland."

Most of the people now running a losing airline came up through the ranks from the fre-

Some ordered planes that were too big — others ordered planes that were too small. When they had too many planes in moth-balls, they had to sell a lot of them to the little grys who were putting them out of business. Of course it wasn't their fault. One of the major airline executives was walking through his terminal at Kennedy Airport and it was jammed with people. He immediately ordered six new 747s. What he didn't realize, until later, was that all the people there were from Central America, waiting for their grandmothers to PARIS — On stage, Yves Montand offers audiences the extraordinary gift of a man at ease with himself. The voice is passion restrained, as relaxed as a walk in the sun.

The heat, the temper, the hard edges come elsewhere. In the last few months they have been part of the singer and actor's emergence at age 62 as a different kind of political player in France. He has said enough since midsum-mer to be attacked in Izvestia, the Soviet government newspaper, and for a public opinion survey group to announce last week that 55 percent of the French believe that what Montand, the showman, thinks about politics is more important than what the country's professionals say.

He has said so much, in fact, that Le Matin, the Paris newspaper with the most direct ties to the Socialist government, wrote, "That's enough, Monsieur Mon-tand! Too much is too much, Monsieur Montand." The Communist Party called him a turn-coat and found what it insisted was an African proverb to deal with his case: "The higher a monkey climbs the tree, the more he shows his bottom." There was more: The party dragged out Montand's older brother, Julien, an employee of a branch of a Communist-led labor union, to say that Yves never worked much as a kid, liked to give a more "diversified" picture of his youth in poverty than reality would allow, and has taken on the "false vocation of somebody who thinks he can talk about everything with total self-assurance."

Once a working-class, leftist hero, the entertainer has become a problematical figure for some of his old friends.

Highly compressed, what Montand has been saying is that the Soviet Union is a brutal and aggrandizing state, that many people in the West refuse to understand this or to defend themselves against it, that French in-tervenion in Chad was necessary but came too late, that the leadership of the French Communist Party is full of people who have been around since the time of Stalin and Beria, and that the something about running the economy that the current Socialist government does not. The French left has recently tried, wrongly, he said, to brand a few rightist extremists as fascists and was bogged down in a sentimentality "more dangerous than Stalinist leaders."

Samples from a conversation last week in his living room: "People today only consider two solutions in dealing with the Soviets. That's not the solution. It's the firmness and solidarity of the democratic countries. I very much fear that the American struggle against Soviet expansionism is just a gadget, a gim-

Fons Oerlemans, of Belgium, said they all langhed when he and his Dutch wife, Margaretha Arens, set off from New York City to cross the Atlantic in a Dodge truck. After a 3,000-mile "drive" on the high seas they arrived wet, weary and victorious in Lisbon. "Not bad for a truck," Oerlemans, 45, quipped a ruck." Oenemans, 43, quapped, from the raft he had specially designed to keep the British-built, diesel-powered van afloat during the journey, which started Aug. 17. The former engineer said there were no major mishaps on the trip, like the built had been afternooned. although hurricane-force winds off the U.S. coast forced them to turn off their engine and drift for two nights in rough seas. They stopped for two weeks in the Azores so Oerlemans could be treated for minor burns and stayed an extra week to rest. Steering from the van's cab, the couple took turns at the wheel in two-hour shifts during the crossing. They used radios to monitor shipping and keep in touch with friends on shore. The drive shaft of the truck, with its 115-horsepower engine, was linked to the raft's propeller. Navigation was done by sextant. The couple scrapped plans to er, and officials say only a continue by sea to Amsterdam.
